TWO THUMBS UP!

WHAT W'S BEAUTY DIRECTOR, Jane Larkworthy, IS HOOKED ON THIS MONTH.

The latest scents to get you on the path to floral nirvana (clockwise, from lower left):

Bulgari Omnia India Garnet ($65, sephora.com) is probably the closest thing to Jaipur in a bottle, blending Indian tuberose and osmanthus with crisp mandarin and spicy saffron.

Rodin Bis ($290, oliolusso.com) is the second fragrance from the cult beauty maven Linda Rodin. The bergamot, rose, and jasmine combo pays homage to her mom.

Cartier La Panthère ($103, cartier.us) is intensely sultry, with gardenia as the dominant note and hints of mossy chypre and sexy musk.

Jour d'Hermès Absolu ($153, usa.hermes.com): Hermès perfumer Jean-Claude Ellena added rose and amber to the original Jour d'Hermès, lending warmth and sensuality to the classic white floral.

Givenchy L'Atelier Nérolí Originel ($220, saks.com): Each of the seven fragrances in this collection was created with a Givenchy look in mind. A 2006 Audrey Hepburn-worthy taffeta gown inspired this elegant orange blossom and iris scent.

Carven L'Eau de Toilette ($105, saks.com), a very ladylike mix of sweet pea, peony, and freesia, is so chic and crisp I instantly feel more pulled together after I spray it on.

Bonbon by Viktor & Rolf ($115, saks.com) sounds (and smells) almost edible, with jasmine and orange blossom nearly upstaged by creamy caramel.

Bottega Veneta Essence Aromatique ($180, nordstrom.com) tempers the sweetness of rose with herbal coriander, citrusy bergamot, and warm sandalwood.

Yves Saint Laurent Supreme Bouquet ($250, saks.com) is just the floral explosion its name suggests: tuberose, ylang-ylang, and jasmine cut with a bit of pink peppercorn.

Dior Diorissimo Extrait de Parfum ($175, dior.com) is among my all-time favorites, and—though it's been around since 1956—it now comes in a superintense formulation. I'm saving it for black-tie events.

Byredo Flowerhead ($145, byredo.com): Ben Gorham imagined an Indian wedding ceremony when creating this jasmine, tuberose, and rose confection.

Lancôme Paris L'Autre Oud ($175, lancome.com) is the least typically feminine of the bunch, with the dominant smoky wood note softened by a dash of rose absolute. »

COFFEE BREAK

For the past few months, my morning drink of choice has been the Thunderbolt, an iced lemonade-and-espreso combo that is much more delicious than it sounds. The only downside? It seems to be making my pearly whites a bit less pearly. Go Smile has come to the rescue with Sonic Blue Teeth Whitening System ($129, qvc.com), a vibrating toothbrush that has a little LED blue light snug in the center. When you brush, the light activates the hydrogen peroxide solution in the brand's whitening gel. After a week, I could actually see a difference.

ALL THAT JASMINE

I recently took a trip to Jaipur, India, and I was as overwhelmed by my visit to the Gem Palace (above) as I was by the profusion of flowers—bursting out of market stalls (right), floating in fountains, draped over elephants. The scent was amazing—and not something I'm likely to experience in New York anytime soon. But that doesn't mean I'm not going to try to fake it. The crop of new fragrances at right certainly helps.

WHO JANE'S ADDICTION

PLATINUM POLISH

What do Tilda Swinton, Catherine Deneuve, and I have in common? We've all been blonded by Christophe Robin—and during my recent trip to Paris he took my tresses a shade lighter than usual. I love the paler color, but the extra bleach involved has compelled me to add a few pampering products to my routine. First, I swapped my usual shampoo for supergentle Purely Perfect Cleansing Creme ($40, purelyperfect.com). Devoid of sodium lauryl sulfate (a lathering agent that can be harsh on locks), the formula doubles as a conditioner. After washing, I spray RestorSea Revitalizing Scalp Treatment ($150, restorsea.com) directly onto my scalp, to clear away dead skin cells that could potentially block my follicles. Finally, to replenish fading color, once a week I use John Frieda Colour Refreshing Gloss ($12, target.com), which I leave on for five minutes and then rinse. It comes in six shades, and my choice is For Cool Blondes. If the shoe fits...

FAKE IT TILL YOU MAKE IT

I've honestly never had a tan. Not because I'm some Skin Cancer Foundation poster child who bathes in SPF and carries a parasol, but because my porcelain-fair skin, when exposed to rays, goes straight from white to crimson to major peeling. So for me, summer is all about lathering on the sunblock and then doing my best to mimic the healthy glow of everyone around me. Here's how I'll do it this year (from left):

Hang Ten 50 Classic Sport Natural Sunscreen ($13, hangtensunscreen.com): In the water, this nongreasy spray will be my go-to. It lasts for more than an hour without reapplication—enough time, hopefully, to get up on one water ski.

Jane Iredale Golden Shimmer Face and Body Lotion ($32, shop.janeiredale.com): I'll rub a bit of this subtly sparkly potion onto my cheekbones, then smooth whatever is left on my hands onto my bare shoulders so they look a little less pasty.

Drunk Elephant Umbra Sheer Physical Defense SPF 30 ($42, drunkelephant.com): This cream, which—unlike many zinc oxide formulations—feels ultralight on the skin, will be great for protecting my face. It's also packed with natural antioxidants like sunflower-shoot extract, raspberry-seed oil, and marula oil.

St. Tropez Self Tan Luxe Dry Oil ($50, sephora.com): I love how this very light oil gives my gams a touch of bronze without the usual messy application ordeal, and I love even more how it leaves my skin feeling incredibly soft.

PERFECTLY FRANK

I'm always looking for elixirs that promote better health, so I was thrilled when my nutrition guru, Dr. Frank Lipman (above), showed me his new Be Well MCT Oil ($44, bewellbydrfranklipman.com, above). MCT stands for medium-chain triglycerides, a type of fat that, Dr. Lipman says, is essential for everything from maintaining muscle mass to staving off memory loss. Dr. Lipman has emulsified his formula into this easy-to-digest pineapple-coconut-flavored concoction, which happen to be the two fruits in my morning smoothie. Kismet.

PALM BEACH REDUX

I am totally smitten with the range of coral shades—from milky to intense—that are popping up in both makeup and polish collections this spring. They feel at once retro and fresh.

1. Lipstick Queen Lipstick in Jungle Queen ($22, spacenk.com)
2. Urban Decay Naked Lip Gloss in Streak ($20, urbandecay.com)
3. Shiseido Lacquer Gloss in In the Flesh ($25, sephora.com)
4. Chanel Lèvres Scintillantes Glossimer in Bliss ($32, chanel.com)
5. Clinique Blush in Peach Pop ($21, clinique.com)
6. Tom Ford Polish in Coral Beach ($32, neimanmarcus.com)
7. Michael Kors Nail Lacquer in Audition ($18, macys.com)

NEARLY NAKED

Five years ago, the dermatologist Nicholas Perricone dipped his (no doubt very smooth) toe into the cosmetics world, adding a sheer imperfection-erasing liquid called No Foundation Foundation to his popular skincare line. Now, he's going full-on with Perricone MD No Makeup Skincare, a collection for those of us who want the world to believe we're just naturally gorgeous. There are no eye shadows or liners—just No Mascara Mascara, which provides clean, glop-free length; No Foundation Foundation Serum, a more matte take on the original; a concealer; a lipstick; No Bronzer Bronzer; and, my favorite, No Blush Blush, which gives cheeks that I-just-ran-five-miles flush. Now if only someone would invent the No Workout Workout. ($30 to $55, perriconemd.com)
